BLOOD RED VINES by Richard Wheat

A Book Report

I was very impressed with Dick's writing ability.
Blood Red Vines is a very good read and I recommend it highly.

— Norma McAravy

I enjoyed reading Dick Wheat's novel about the soldier who came back from Afghanistan to Carmel Valley and formed a relationship with a Frenchman and his family. In time he was able to develop a new and more fulfilling way of life.

— Frances Sanchez

Blood Red Vines is a lovely novel. Dick skillfully paints pictures of scenery, characters, clothing and cuisine drawing you into the ever changing story. A delightful read.

— Ramona Smith

I don't know whether the appeal of faraway places and adventure contrasted with the healing peace to be found in the valley vineyards is what draws us into the novel or the amazing characters that Dick has created! They become friends and we keep turning pages. Please, Dick, tell us more about the future of both characters and vines!

Initial quote from an article by May Waldroup and Martin Rosen

Our award winning author, Bob Lindsey, in this publication of Oct 28 to Nov 5, has been quoted as saying, "I loved this novel. It's part thriller, part psychological roller coaster. A story that moves swiftly from war to battered Afghanistan to a placid valley in Central California's verdant wine country. Now that we have read the novel and have discussed it with others, the comments are coming in;

FLAG AT HALF MAST

The flag outside Carmel Valley Manor has been at half-mast to demonstrate sympathy for our long-term allies, the French and the situation of misery and terror in Paris and the world

AN OLD TALE OF DICKENS' CHRISTMAS

The Manor Players have another play up their magical sleeves for the holidays on December 19 at 7:15 pm in the meetinghouse. This will be an adaptation of The Christmas Carol in the form of a ReadersøTheater. As you remember the lines of the play are read dramatically, but the acting is limited.

With our highly trained troop, Dickens will become alive again and the agony of a miserable man unable to attune to life as he becomes bitterer with his human failures is assisted by ghosts who are sent to him with grand lessons that we should all heed. Despite what appears to be a plunge into despair, the lessons are learned and the play becomes a beacon of light in everyone's life.

Please join us for this old favorite and a glorious sing along afterward.
