

Memorial day at the Manor

We met at the putting green and watched the fun as golfers competed. The Bloody Mary bar opened in time for awards. Next came the beautiful memorial poem, "In Flanders Fields" recited by Mel Blevens. His emphasis of the second verse was most moving. Otto Neely played the strong, mournful farewell. Boy Scouts from the local troop led us in the pledge of allegiance that followed and joined us at tables in the dining room for a huge barbecue. It was a pleasure to have these young men here as part of our memorial. (Our Centenarian, Bob Corson, is pictured with Boy Scouts and as a scout in his youth) It was an afternoon of bridge, lawn bowling and an amusing movie.

Thanks to Ramona Smith for planning a perfect day and Mel Blevens, Otto Neely, Jack and Kay Enbom, Peggy Smith, Clare Riggs and our amazing staff who worked to make it happen.

Computer Stuff: the trouble with passwords

Folks ask me to help them with their computer problems. So I can say with certainty that many of these problems involve passwords. I can also say that I too have password problems from time to time. My approach has been to write them down in a little 80 page notebook & I've filled it up from front to back; and then more than 50% of the way from the back to the front. And of course I've had to update many of these passwords, so it's pretty messy.

I've been reluctant to use the password security application available from NORTON, for free if you are using COMCAST internet (most folks at the Manor do use Comcast). It's a good application and Otto Neely uses it, so I'm probably just too compulsive about passwords. I just think that so many people use it that it must be a big target for hackers. Nevertheless I keep looking for something better.

Here's a brief description of the key elements in two new products that look interesting and represent the direction the marketplace seems to be going.

First: a mechanism to store each password you own along with all the related info, your personal identification items (name, birthdate, phone number, address); the account (organization, store) that the password is for; security question answers (e.g. name of your favorite dog, grandmother's maiden name); alternate means of communication (cell phone, a second email account). Does that mean no more note book? Probably not, but at least you don't have to go pawing thru your messy notebook all the time. AND it will update passwords for you.

Second: powerful encryption each time you use one of your passwords, so no two passwords transmitted are ever the same. I need to explain public key encryption here but I won't. I'll just say that AMAZON gets your correct password at their end with some magic in the middle that does not allow it to be seen anywhere on the network in between.

New Procedure!

All Monday Morning and Medical Forums are recorded on a CD. Previously, residents who wished to hear a recording would sign up on the bulletin board. The recording went to the first person on the list who would give it to the second and so on. This system has not been working, so, from now on, all recordings will be in the custody of the Library. If you wish to hear a recording, go to the Library between 10AM and 12AM when a Library Worker is on duty, and check it out on a blue card. If the recording you want is unavailable, the Library Worker will take your name, and you will get a call when the recording has been returned. Promptly returning recordings that you check out will assure that this system works better than the previous one. If you have questions, call Charlie or Arden Hoppe at X4865
